Brand New Book  Print on Demand .The subject of love captivates us for all kinds of reasons, in all kinds of ways; and many words have been used throughout human history to talk about it. It's clear to me, that we're most interested in love because we know, deep down, that love is what gives our lives the greatest meaning and happiness. We are most fulfilled, most at peace, when we live as love; being attentive and caring toward our loved ones and those we cherish—our family, and friends, and anyone else we choose. Love leads us, as well, to those situations, activities, and creative pursuits that move us, lift us up, and give us a real sense of being connected to someone or something. Love simply nurtures and nourishes us like nothing else can. One could even say that love is what we're always seeking, and what life is really all about. And isn't a truly satisfying life one filled with heart-warmth and joy, passion and generosity, kindness and compassion? And it's true, that we humans have the capacity (and for some people, even the propensity) to value other things more than love. What we end up with then, are lives far less fulfilling than they could be. And, likewise, our world is far less peaceful than it could be when love is not held in the highest regard; and isn't this painfully evident as we look around our world these days. Ultimately, love is valued the highest because it touches us most deeply, and aligns us with who we are at our innermost and from where love flows. Love reflects what's in our heart...
