It would be unfair to the general industries of the country if, when called upon to make the necessarily great sacrifices in scrapping their original methods of driving, and substituting a more efficient electrical motor, every care were not taken to adopt at once the most economical method in outlay, and the most efficient in practice afterwards. 3.--Position With Respect To The Board Of Trade And The Home Office. The regulations which are being imposed upon electrical users are somewhat confusing and complicated to the uninitiated, and the author thinks it will not be without use if he attempts to put concisely the obligations which users are placed under with respect to their employees by the regulations of the Board of Trade, and more particularly by the regulations issued under Section 79 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, by the Home Office. A works skilfully changed by a competent adviser from steam driving to electrical driving would, necessarily, be protected on all these points. At the same time, the author does not wish to frighten manufacturers, and is of opinion that through the regulations being misunderstood, many competent business men are chary of taking the step of changing over from one system to the other,...
