Not illustrated. 1919 Excerpt: .how to build up the steady-state theory of the induction motor from the usual periodic solution and by precisely analogous methods its transient states can be investigated by the present theory. In fact the method can be employed to deal with systems in which non-linear differential equations appear, such as the three-element vacuum tube. I have re-read Professor Pupin s important 1899 and 1900 papers to which he calls attention in his discussion. Without in any sense minimizing their importance and originality, I cannot agree with him that they treated the subject exhaustively if by that Professor Pupin means the transient phenomena and oscillations of such structures. Pupin s treatment of this phase of the problem is limited to writing down the transients as a sum of characteristic damped vibrations, each of which is multiplied by an undetermined constant of integration. Now this is correct as...
